technique uses the same numbered pattern that you might use in Paper Piecing, but you don't stitch through the paper. Instead, you pre-cut the freezer paper templates, press them onto the fabric, cut the shape out, adding extra for seam allowance. Then you use the freezer paper as a stitching guide to create those sharp points. When the block is done, the freezer paper pulls off easily because it has not been stitched through. Pros

Printing freezer paper foundations You can trace the foundations onto freezer paper, or you can print them directly onto the paper if you have an inkjet printer.

(I've read it isn't a good idea with a laser printer.)

I cut a piece of freezer paper to 8 1/2" x 11, the size of the regular paper I usually feed through the printer.

A couple of years ago, I learned how to use freezer paper as a foundation for paper-piecing and it revolutionized this technique for me. It is fast, does not require removal of the paper foundation, and the foundation can be reused at least a dozen times, saving time and paper. I have provided a PDF pattern for the block "Woven Star."

Foundation Paper Piecing is a patchwork technique where you stitch fabric to paper. The paper is removed before quilting. This tutorial will give you the basics for how to foundation paper piece with the traditional method. (There's an alternative method that uses freezer paper and I'll link to my tutorial on that further down.)

The manufacturer recommends a 20 stitches per inch for paper piecing when you intend to tear away the foundation. You could choose to leave this foundation in your quilt for stabilization (no removal). June Tailor, Inc. then recommends using 10 stitches per inch. At this time (10-3-18) it's on Amazon with a Prime supplier for about 27¢ per sheet.
