Reading Next(2004) and Writing Next(2007) have documented the importance of the reading-writing connection.Both reports affirm that students' reading and writing abilities are complimen-tary and growth in one skill inevitably leads to growth in the other (i.e., students become better readers by strengthening their writing skills and vice-versa).

The Reading-Writing Connection

The relationship between language by eye (reading) and language by hand (writing) has been recognized and studied (Berninger, 2002). One of the claims is that reading is "really writing" (actively creating meaning), and writing is "really reading" (passively finding what culture and history have inscribed in our heads), and

Connecting Reading and Writing: A Case Study

What Is the Reading/Writing Connection? Gail Tompkins (2006) notes that reading and writing have been traditionally thought of and taught as ? ip sides of the coin—as opposites; "readers decoded or deciphered language and writers encoded or produced written language" (p. 46).

What Is the Reading/Writing Connection?

The connection between reading and writing can help solidify these skills in young readers. Parents and teachers should help children "sound out" words in both their reading and writing. When a child comes to a word in their reading that is unfamiliar, the adult(s) working with her can model or guide her in sounding out the word using knowledge of phonemes (sound "chunks").
