Unani is Greek medicine. Its foundations were laid by Hippocrates (460-377 B.C.) and Galen (131-210 B.C.), and it owes its further development to the achievements of Arabic and Persian physicians such as Abu Bakr, Ar Razi (850-925 B.C.), and Avicenna (Abu Ali Ibn Sina) (980-1037), who, on the basis of Galen's and Hippocrates' works, created a harmonious medical system. Unani's theory of medicine is based on the concept of the four humors: blood, mucus, yellow and black bile. The initial equilibrium of humors determines a person's state of health, imbalance and disease. Basic concepts: Elements, Nature, Humors. The main treatment protocol is to restore the balance of humors, which uses natural medicines and methods. Currently, Unani, along with other types of alternative medicine, is widely practiced in the world. The effort set by the authors of this publication are: 1) to try to find a correspondence between Unani's provisions and the ideas of modern medicine; 2) to systematize the rich practical material accumulated by the authors, so that they can be used by specialists in their practice; 3) to interest in the methods and theoretical foundations of Unani's medicine by doctors who are unfamiliar with it.

Unani medicine originated in Greek medicine (which was also a source for some of the Tibetan medical practices), and then adopted into Islamic medicine, and later become a major therapeutic method in India and Pakistan, rivaling Ayurvedic medicine.
